Feeling better

The key person in recovery is YOU. You and your provider should make a treatment plan based on your goals for your health.

Help your provider by:

- Talking about your feelings and progress. Tell them as much as you can.
- Writing down how the medication makes you feel.

This will help you both make better choices about your treatment.

What is behavioral healthcare?

This refers to treatment and recovery from mental illness and substance use. Depression, drug and alcohol abuse, and ADHD are types of behavioral health problems.

Many behavioral health problems are medical problems just like cancer or heart disease. They can be treated.

Why is behavioral health and wellness important?

Behavioral health shapes how we feel, think, and act. Mental health problems can lead to poor health, self-injury, or even suicide.

Studies show people with depression are more at risk for stroke. They are also more at risk for a second heart attack. Mental health problems can happen to anyone.

They may need help from an expert. Left alone, problems can get worse.

Warning signs of a possible problem:

- Sudden changes in behavior
- Missing too much work or school
- Not eating or eating too much
- Not sleeping or sleeping too much
- Trouble focusing
- Spending a lot of time alone
- Being angry with everything and everyone

Your first appointment: what to expect

Your provider will want to get to know you. They will want to know about the problems you want to work on.

They may ask about your family history. They want to help you find strengths and skills that will help you recover.

Providers are bound by strict rules to keep your data private. What you tell your provider helps them create the right treatment plan for you.
